

Preparing for Flu Season

Influenza “Flu” is a contagious disease. It is caused by the influenza virus, which can be spread by coughing, sneezing, or nasal secretions.

Anyone can get the flu. For most people, it lasts only a few days. It can cause: fever, cough, sore throat, headache, chills, muscle aches, and fatigue.

To prevent flu, make sure you and your family members get the flu vaccine -- the essential key to flu prevention. The following categories of people should receive a flu vaccine: All children from 6 months through 18 years of age, anyone 50 years of age or older. Anyone who is at risk of complications from influenza, or more likely to require medical care such as women who will be pregnant during flu season, anyone with long-term health problems such as heart disease, lung disease, asthma, diabetes, anemia and other blood disorders, and people with a weakened immune system.

The flu vaccine is also recommended for all health care providers, residents of nursing homes or anyone who lives with or cares for people who are at high risk for influenza-related complications.
